The Internet Archive supports the efforts of the Archives in Motion (AIM) Workshops project to assist film and video archives in Albania and throughout the Western Balkans. The Internet Archive will be able to host and support the digital asset management of their content that will be transferred and digitized during the course of this project.

As a digital librarian and the founder of the Internet Archive, I have been working to provide universal access to all knowledge for more than twenty-five years. Since the mid-1980s, I have focused on developing technologies for information discovery and digital libraries.

The AIM Workshops is a project that serves to further proliferate universal networks of knowledge sharing, and to ensure that the rich film and video cultures of the Western Balkans will be available as is all Internet Archive content—to researchers, scholars, historians, the disabled, and the general public.

Sincerely,
